Under the solemn guise of deep Winter's freeze and snow, a lively group of children drummed together focused on themes of peace, togetherness, and healing. They are preparing for a possible upcoming Mother's Day drum as well.

This Sunday our small group of children enjoyed a meaningful exchange of joys and concerns. We then continued our discussion around "Happiness" and read the story "The Desert Spring" from Buddha and had a discussion about not giving up when faced with a challenge.

This Sunday we were all very excited to make our "Happiness Jars". We had spoken about this idea a few weeks ago and the children (and I) just loved the idea of having a jar that we would use to write down something good about our day and then if we were having a not so good day, we could read some of the things that had made us happy to help lift up our spirits. The children decided that this would also be good for moms and dads for when they were "grumpy". So please feel free to make your own happiness jars at home!
